

Observations

Recollections of events and moments will always be transmitted through the filter of the authors experiences and hindsight. This collection hopes to lead the reader to think how they would react if confronted with a similar situation. An excerpt: In this case, all my pre-conceived notions, mostly transmitted by news media, about Muslims and the homeless fail. He is kind and charitable. He is educated and scrupulously clean. He is satisfied and friendly. I am, again, reminded that even though stereotypes may have some basis in reality, extending that stereotype to all member of a community will prove false. There are real differences between people and there are real similarities. On which do I choose to focus?
